

iCAM Wireless Cloud Print

As mobile and tablet usage becomes ever more popular, users are demanding the ability to print direct from their devices over the internet. With the iCAM Wireless Cloud Print Solution, library users can print from their own device, either whilst in the library building or from home.

This convenient and easy to use solution gives users the flexibility to print from wherever suits them, and provides libraries with the opportunity to increase foot fall and income streams.

Compatible with Android, Apple and Windows phones, tablets and laptops, the solution allows printing of web pages, web-based email and a range of document formats.

Users in the library can easily find the library's published printers and send documents to print without the need to install a printer driver or make any configuration changes to their device. When printing from home, users simply add their chosen library site's printer URL to their device and send the document to print, to be collected when they next visit the library.

Documents are sent to the iCAM Administration print queue, ready for release by staff when the user comes to collect them. The iCAM print solution allows the user's document to be manipulated if required, including changing from grey scale print to colour and altering the number of copies / pages. Therefore, users only need to pay for and receive the pages they actually require, regardless of what was initially selected and sent for printing.

With self-service functionality currently in development, iCAM Wireless Cloud Print is the ideal solution to offer convenient printing for your public users, with minimal staff input.
